— THE PROBLEM

37 million visitors. The same ten photos.

Tokyo is having a record tourism boom — but everyone funnels into the same handful of crossings and towers. The real city stays invisible: the moss-covered shrine behind the vending machine, the vinyl bar with no sign, the story only the wind remembers.

Tourist traps

Crowded, generic spots — discovery flattened into a checklist.

Static guidebooks

Lists that don't know who you are, where you stand, or what's near.

No reason to wander

Nothing rewards curiosity, so visitors never leave the main drag.

~80%

of inbound spend concentrates in a few dense districts, while neighborhood culture and local shops go unseen.

Illustrative · Japan inbound at a record ~36.9M in 2024 (JNTO)

— THE SOLUTION

Meguri turns the city into a living quest.

A 400-year-old fox spirit leads you off the tourist path — each quest anchored to a real Google Maps place, verified on arrival, and rewarded with a unique ukiyo-e postcard.

01

Choose a guide

An AI companion with its own voice.

02

Get a quest

A cryptic hook to a real place.

03

Walk & scan

GPS or camera confirms arrival.

04

Collect

Mint a generative postcard.

— WHY IT WORKS

A reason to keep walking.

Progression that hooks

XP, levels, and Kakera currency. Difficulty scales — famous spots early, genuinely hidden ones later.

Daily quests & streaks

A fresh reason to open the app and explore one more block, every day.

Collectible ukiyo-e postcards

Each discovery mints a unique generative artwork — a passport you actually want to fill.

Co-op parties

Quest with friends in real time — social pull turns walks into shared adventures.
